Touring Ireland's world-class medieval castles has long been on the itinerary of many visitors to Ireland, and the tour is one of the most popular attractions in the country. One of Ireland's finest is the Georgian residence of the Parliament of Ireland, at the Hill of Tara, which has been around since the 11th century, if not before. The property is composed of a series of inter-connecting concentric rings of defensive walls and ramparts, with the innermost ring about 50m in diameter and up to 10m in height. Located just outside the village of Ballyshannon, the Hill of Tara is one of the most important sites in Ireland. This extremely impressive structure was once the seat of the Irish High Kings. The ancient site is now owned by the government and managed by the Office of Public Works, a company whose responsibility it is to conserve the area. Although there is no working medieval castle on the site, it is one of the earliest Irish buildings to survive the Viking raids of the 9th century and the Cromwellian invasion of the mid-17th century. It is also one of the most important archaeological sites in the country. For this reason, the National Monuments Service has put the Hill of Tara on the list of endangered monuments, which makes it a site that is exempt from the Heritage Protection and Restraint of Trade Regulations. This means that there are no restrictions on visitors' photography of the Hill of Tara as long as their cameras are not used to take photographs. The Oriel Portrait of the Hill of Tara by Richard Jackson, a history of Ireland tour, is now available as a high resolution poster. For more information or to purchase your copy, click here. The site of the hill is held in sacred ground by the ancient Tuatha Dé Danann, an ancient people who were said to have come from the East and settled in Ireland. The area was also a pagan place of worship, and is where the Irish High Kings crowned their kings. The central feature of the site is a circular Stonehenge, a sacred site in Ireland from 82157476af
